

Golden Age has restored and reinvented the old screening room of the heritage-listed Paramount Pictures Building in Surry Hills, Sydney. Paramount House

Paramount House is a cultural, architectural and literal cornerstone of the area of Surry Hills once known as the 'Hollywood Quarter'. Built in 1940 in a Late Deco style, it shows how elegance can be achieved by focusing on what is essential.

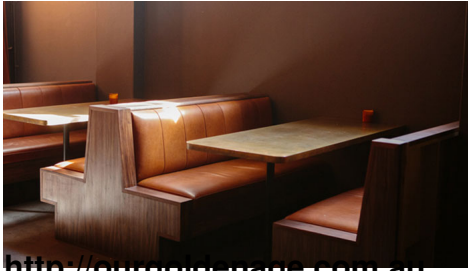

Already regarded as a hub for many of Sydney's creative businesses, the story of Paramount House is only just beginning. Alongside Golden Age Cinema & Bar, a cafe and variety of retailers are scheduled to open for business over the coming year.

Golden Age Cinema & Bar

Drawing upon this rich history, the former screening room of Paramount House has been carefully renovated by a bewitching collective of architects, interior designers, auteurs and furniture makers. It brings together the past, present and future to create a unique environment for people to watch films, enjoy a drink or host an event.
